

Domestic Science I ext Book Page i CHAPTER I IJEAVENING AGENTS THE common leavening agents in use in the home are yeast and baking powder. Yeast is a microscopic plant which, in the leavening process, produces changes which finally result in the breaking up of sugars into alcohol and carbon dioxid gas. Baking Powder is a mixture of several substances which produce this same gas by chemical action. This gas, by forming in small bubbles throughout the dough mass, lightens or leavens it. Carbon dioxid gas is sonjetimes called carbonic acid gas. This is the gas which is present in all carbonated waters, whether natiu alor artificial, as in soda fountain waters. DISADVANTAGES OF YEAST IN the case of yeast, the fermentation which produces the gas is never of a single kind, as many different fermentations are going on at the same time. It is impossible, commercially, to control these different fermentations so that they will always exist in the same proportions; hence, we find that the flavors from different bakings vary greatly and are sometimes objectionable. Moreover, several hours must be allowed for the process of fermentation before the food can be placed in the oven. Fermentation does not take place readily in the presence of large quantities of butter, lard or eggs.(Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and dont occur in the book.)About the Publisher Forgotten Books is a publisher of historical writings, such as: Philosophy, Classics, Science, Religion, History, Folklore and Mythology.Forgotten Books Classic Reprint Series utilizes the latest technology to regenerate facsimiles of historically important writings.
