Desirable Accessories; Speedmeters: Horns, etc. Touring Equipment. How and what to Cook. Lincoln Highway. Transcontinental Tour. Concerning Accessories and Equipment. To differentiate between the accessories and spare parts actually necessary on a car, and those which are really only luxuries or desirable accessories, one has to have used them all under varying conditions and over extended periods to gain a knowledge of the desirability of each and an intimacy with their general utility. Many a novice having unfortunately got into the clutches of an unscrupulous dealer, Necessary +The necessary equipment for a car should consist of: Lamp globes or bulbs, horn, tire tools, tire repairs, extra tire and tube, tool kit, jack, towrope, top, windshield, speedometer, bumper, hydrometer, odometer and a good clock. Though the clock is the last on this list it is very necessary, and it should be of the best and well built to stand vibration. As cars are driven in all seasons of the year the clock should have a compensating balance so that it will not be affected by extremes in temperature. Experienced automobile drivers advise a dock to do away with the inconvenience of referring to their watch when clothed for cold or stormy weather as a few seconds necessary to do this might result in an accident to the machine or passengers. Necessity of a speedometer. A speedometer is necessary in testing a car to learn its speed capabilities under various conditions--in order to time trips over various distances--to avoid violation of the speed limit laws, the penalty for which is arrest and fine.
