

The Anatomy of the Madreporaria: III. By G. Herbert Fowler, B.A. Oxon., Ph.D., Berkeley Fellow of the Owens College, Manchester. With Plates I, II. The present memoir deals with the anatomy of Turbinaria (p. 1), a colonial Perforate coral; of Lophohelia (p. 6), an Imperforate form, colonial hut with separate calyces; and of the two aberrant Imperforate genera, Seriatopora (p. 10) and Pocillopora (p. 13), in which the calyces are merged in the mesenchyme. To these descriptions is appended a note on the skeleton of the labellum. The most important facts now described for the first time are 1. The absence of directive mesenteries in Lophohelia, which thus differs from all Hexactinise hitherto described. 2. The retraction of the tentacles of Seriatopora by introversion, of which no other instance is known among the Madreporaria. 3. The presence of centres of calcification in the theca. As in previous memoirs (2. 3), I have endeavoured to let the figures speak for themselves rather than to give detailed descriptions of structure. Turbinaria, sp. (figs. 13). For the opportunity of investigating this form, as in previous instances, I am indebted to the liberality of my teacher, Professor H. N. Moseley, who procured the material during the voyage of H.M.S. Challenger. i. Corallum. The colony is crateriform or goblet shaped, VOL. XXVIII, PART 1. NEW SER. (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and do not occur in the book.)
